Unseen South Hams artists and organisers

Uniting to see here

A GROUP of artists from the South Hams have put on their first show in Dartmouth's Old Library.

The exhibition, called Unseen South Hams, brought together established artists and students from Dartmouth Community College.

The group had to completely transform the building, even down to re-plastering walls and putting in carpets in the few days running up to the exhibition, which proved a real hit with a large amount of visitors who attended its opening on Friday, November 21.

The show also saw one of the areas of the building transformed into a silver wonderland featuring a sound installation for visitors to walk through.

Jack Corrigan, one of the organisers of the event said: 'We are delighted at how it has gone. This is hopefully the start of a successful partnership between South Devon artists and this success will only spur us on.'
